It was so much fun that we all met at the Paris-Orly airport, taking the same plane without having planned it! I was so impressed by our colleague from French Guyana, who continuously spotted French celebrities and pointed them out to us (reminding me that I might need to watch more French television, as I knew none of them). With this first intercultural experience, we were on the way to sunny Corsica!

Most part of our meeting was spent outside, and to sum up the whole experience, we came to the conclusion that sunny weather, hard work and fresh air makes good people!

The Corsican team took us on a work trip into the mountains, training and teaching us how to build stone walls (which is normally done by people in their training courses). So we got the ultimate chance to eternalize ourselves on the island. It was very satisfying to get to see so much of the beautiful landscape this time and having the feeling to get attached to the surroundings.

Thank you very much for all the inspired contributions. Everything was so well organized, the Grundtvig team is now also in a very good place and it was very rewarding to work together.
