

Wednesday, 6th April 11

We leave in the morning by train to the airport and unfortunately some of us miss the plane to London. For this reason, we do not participate to welcome dinner.

Thursday, 7th April

I was impressed by the huge number of staff at PPT, professionals originated from many different countries. Accordingly, the working atmosphere these days was very lively. As part of the well-prepared presentation by Brian on Learning Blocks I realized the importance of one's learning history and the knowledge of my own learning type through practical exercises and illustrated by the theoretical underpinnings. The idea behind all this is that we get better learning results when we learn in relationship. For this reason learning relationships should be empathic relationships. In this context I had a chance to test and asses my own ability to empathize. In short breaks, good food and a relaxed working atmosphere, a learning environment was created, which was pleasant, exciting and effective in the same time.

Saturday, 9th April

Our meeting on Saturday, in a smaller round was a nice ending, where we kept and reflected and evaluated the results together. For me the meeting in London was something very special, because everything seemed very authentic.

The London weather was the coronation, sun and 27 degrees Celsius.
